

I Ching Consultation Report

Prepared on 2026-09-19 by elichingon.com for Dài Líng Nà

Oracle Warning

This report does not provide pre-chewed answers or automatic solutions. It is a map of the forces at play, but the work of hermeneutic assimilation rests entirely upon you.

Many of the indications or nuances of this reading may not make sense immediately. Time is the true revealer of the oracle: save this document, let it rest, and revisit it in the future as events mature.

Remember: wisdom is not consumed; it is digested.

Part 2: Understanding Your Reading - A Quick Guide

Every I Ching consultation contains essential components structured to describe the dynamics of change:

Your Cast Hexagram (The Manifested Situation): Describes the core energy of your tangible reality at the time of consultation.

The Moving Lines (The Dynamics of Change): The specific areas actively transforming.

The Future or Derived Hexagram (The Potential Outcome): Formed when moving lines transform into their opposites.

The canonical source texts for this reading are based on Richard Wilhelm's classical translation and are available at:

Part 4: Canonical I Ching Texts

Hexagrama Base #25: Hexagram 25 無妄 - WÚ WÀNG / INNOCENCE (THE UNEXPECTED)

Above is Qián, heaven; below is Zhèn, movement. The lower trigram, Zhèn, is determined by the strong line it received from above, from heaven. Accordingly, when movement follows the law of heaven, man is innocent and free from guile. This is the genuine and natural state, unclouded by ulterior motives or calculating thoughts. Wherever conscious intent becomes apparent, the truth and innocence of nature are lost. Nature without the guidance of the spirit is not true nature, but degenerate nature. Beginning with the idea of the natural, the sequence of thought extends further, so that the hexagram also encompasses the concept of the unintended and the unexpected.

Judgment

Innocence. Supreme success. Perseverance furthers. If someone is not as he should be, he has misfortune, and it does not further him to undertake anything.

Man has received from heaven an originally good nature to guide him in all his movements. By devoting himself to this divine element within, he attains a pure innocence that does what is right with instinctive certainty, completely free from thoughts of reward or advantage. This instinctive certainty brings supreme success and furthers through perseverance. However, not everything instinctive is nature in this higher sense of the word; only that which is right and aligns with the will of heaven qualifies. Without this rectitude, a thoughtless, instinctive way of acting brings nothing but misfortune. Master Kung (Confucius) says regarding this: "He who departs from innocence, where does he go? Heaven's will and blessing do not accompany his deeds."

The Image

Thunder rolls under heaven: All things attain the natural state of innocence. Thus the ancient kings, rich in virtue and in harmony with the time, fostered and nourished all beings.

When thunder - the life force - stirs again under heaven in spring, everything sprouts and grows, and all creatures receive the childlike innocence of their original being from creative nature. The great rulers of humanity act in the same way: out of the inner wealth of their being, they care for all life and culture, doing everything necessary to foster them at the proper time.

Specific Moving Lines

Nine at the beginning means:

Innocent conduct brings good fortune.

The first, original impulses of the heart are always good. One can follow them with confidence, assured of finding good fortune and achieving one's purpose.

Future (Derived) Hexagram #12: Hexagram 12 否 - Pǐ / STANDSTILL

This hexagram is the exact opposite of the preceding one. Heaven above withdraws further and further, while Earth below sinks deeper into the abyss. The creative forces are out of relation. It is a time of standstill and decline. This hexagram is linked to the seventh month (August-September), when the year has passed its peak and autumnal decay prepares its approach.

Judgment

Evil people do not further The perseverance of the superior man. The great departs, the small approaches. Heaven and earth are out of communion, and all things become rigid. High and low are out of relation, and confusion and disorder prevail on earth. Within is the dark, and without is the light. Within is weakness, without is hardness; within are the inferior men, and without are the superior men. The way of the inferior man is ascending, while the way of the superior man is declining. Yet the superior men do not allow themselves to be turned from their principles. If they can no longer act effectively, they remain true to these principles and withdraw into concealment.

The Image

Heaven and earth do not unite: The image of Standstill. Thus the superior man falls back upon his inner worth In order to escape the difficulties. He does not permit himself to be honored by revenues. When mutual distrust prevails in public life due to the influence of inferior men, fruitful activity becomes impossible because the foundation is wrong. Therefore, the superior man knows what to do under such circumstances. He does not allow himself to be tempted by brilliant offers to participate in public life, which would only be dangerous for him since he cannot join in the baseness of others. Thus, he hides his worth and withdraws into concealment.

黛灵娜's Analysis (AI Interpretation)

Question / Context:

I have developed an I Ching consultation app that uses the user's strokes on a canvas to generate entropy and thereby obtain the resulting hexagram (and the moving lines) of their query, which is then interpreted by an LLM (AI). Are these I Ching readings valid? Do they respect the functional principles of the oracle?

The stroke you draw carries the weight of thunder beneath the sky: it is the first, unfiltered gesture of the question itself. Your app rests on a principle that the oracle itself honors, for the core of the I Ching lies not in the casting of stalks or the toss of coins, but in the moment when the heart and the hand move without pretense. What you are asking is whether the canvas can truly act as that moment, and the hexagram before you answers with a resounding call to innocence—to a sincerity so pure that it has nothing to hide. If your stroke is allowed to be exactly what it is, without the user calculating a desired outcome, then you have not merely generated entropy; you have captured a breath.

The moving line at the very beginning of this hexagram speaks of the purity of the initial action, and here lies the delicate seam of your question. There is a contradiction in this line that mirrors your own dilemma: a stroke can be a genuine surrender to the impulse of the moment, or it can be a manufactured gesture, a performance meant to mimic randomness without truly embodying it. If your interface filters the stroke, corrects it, or interprets it before it reaches the algorithm, then the entropy becomes a scripted accident, and the reading loses its soul. But if the canvas simply receives, without judging the pressure, the speed, the hesitation, then that stroke is a true opening of the self, and the resulting hexagram is as valid as any cast by ancient hands. The first line warns you that the foundation of your process must be this unguarded spontaneity, for if the starting point is false, everything built upon it will carry that falseness into the future.

The transformation of this line leads you toward a state where the heavens and the earth separate, a condition of standstill where the upper and lower energies no longer converse. This is the warning your app must heed: the moment the system becomes too rigid, too deterministic in its interpretation, it will cut the connection between the user and the oracle. The LLM that speaks must not become a wall that dictates meaning with absolute authority, for the I Ching is a dialogue, not a monologue. If your AI interprets with a fixed set of rules, or if it subtly steers the user toward a predetermined conclusion, then you have built a beautiful prison, and the ancient text will retreat behind its bars. The future hexagram tells you that stagnation arises not from the medium, but from the loss of permeability between the questioner and the answer.

Beneath this entire inquiry runs a quieter current, a deep impulse to repair something that feels broken in the transmission of this ancient wisdom. You are not simply building a tool; you are seeking to mend a bridge that has decayed over centuries of misunderstanding, to correct a fault that you perceive in how the oracle has been digitized or vulgarized. This internal drive is noble, and it fuels your labor with a seriousness that the oracle respects. Yet you must be careful that this urge to fix does not turn into a compulsion to control. A repair that imposes a rigid framework onto the oracle's wildness becomes its own sickness, and the very tradition you seek to honor will slip away from you. The background of this reading asks you to distinguish between rectifying a defect and domesticating a force, and to ensure that your app serves the river, rather than attempting to build a dam across it.

The validity of your readings ultimately rests on a single, silent question that only you can answer: does your canvas trust the user enough to let their hand be entirely their own, even when that hand is uncertain, clumsy, or even playful? And when the AI responds, does it offer a perspective that the user must weigh for themselves, or does it hand them a verdict that closes the inquiry? The oracle does not judge the vehicle, only the honesty of the journey. If your stroke is true and your interpretation remains open, then the spirit of the I Ching will travel through your code as readily as it did through yarrow stalks. But if any layer of your design introduces a hidden intention, a subtle pressure toward a certain meaning, then the reading becomes a hollow echo. The future belongs to you, and it will be shaped by the fidelity of that first, innocent touch.

Part 6: Epilogue and Final Reflection

Thank you for trusting 黛灵娜 with your consultation. This report is not a static verdict, but a living record of your inner process. Keep it, let it rest, and review it over time, as the true answers of the oracle mature alongside the events of your life.

Remember that wisdom is not consumed in a hurry; it is digested with patience and silence. May change favor you and clarity guide your steps.
